Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure will continue to produce warm and dry conditions across the North Operations region through early Monday. The high will move east late Monday as a Pacific low pressure system rapidly approaches the North Coast. A northeast-east and offshore wind pattern will enhance the dry and warm conditions from the lower western slopes of the Sierra to the coast. Wind gusts will reach 30-40 mph in wind-prone areas, and poor overnight relative humidity recovery will be common in these areas through Monday morning. The main front associated with the low pressure system will advance slowly eastward across the North Operations area on Tuesday. South-southwest winds will increase ahead of the front late Monday and Tuesday, especially along and east of the Cascade-Sierra Crest. During this time humidity will gradually increase in these areas. The low pressure system will reach the North Coast with moderate rain early on Tuesday and spread over the remainder of the region with light to moderate rain by early Wednesday. All areas will see much cooler temperatures and higher relative humidity, and snow levels are likely to drop to around 5500-6000 ft in the north and near 7000 ft in the south. Rainfall totals will be 1-2 inches in the northwest mountains, 0.25-0.50 inches on the upper western Sierra-Cascade slopes, and 0.10-0.25 inches elsewhere. This first system will exit the region by Wednesday afternoon, but a second one will produce about the same amount of precipitation Friday afternoon through Saturday, and a third system is possible early in the following week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will warm a couple of degrees and minimum humidity will drop a few percent each day through Monday as a strong ridge of high pressure continues to build into California from the Pacific Ocean. There will be local northeast to east winds of 10 to 20 mph across the mountains of Southern California Monday morning. A couple of weak Pacific troughs will move into the West Coast Tuesday through next weekend bringing near to a little below normal temperatures and minimum humidity mainly between 20% and 40%. It now appears that these troughs will be weak enough to keep the entire region dry. However, the marine layer is still expected to deepen up to the lower coastal mountain slopes by Wednesday morning. Southwest winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the Sierra Crest, Tehachapi Mountains, Antelope Valley, and Banning Pass Tuesday afternoon through Wednesday afternoon.

WEATHER

Sun Night into Mon Morning	Tuesday into Wednesday
 Fire Danger  Dry, Northerly Winds Gusting to 35mph Sunny and windy Valley highs in the high 80's Mountain highs in the mid 60's to mid 70's	 Breezy Southwesterly Winds  Cooler with a chance of showers Valley highs in low 70's Mountain highs 40's to 50's
